

I CLAIM:

1. A structure of the head of a golf club where the head is related to a hollow structure combined with multiple sheets characterized by that a compression coil being fixed to the back of the striking face of the club head;
5 the compression coil being provided in a direction following the striking; one end of the compression coil being fixed to where at the center of the back of the striking face; another end of the compression coil being fixed with a press bar, both sides of the pressure being welded to the back of the striking face; and the compression coil being held against and fixed to the back of the 10 striking face.